

Planning Your Degree In Line With Your Career Path

A college degree is really important since it decides what your future career holds for you. To keep it straight and simple, a college degree is an investment with assured long-term benefits. But is earning a degree really that important? Well, there are statistics that will make the picture clearer for you. Consider this: professionals with a Bachelor's degree earn 60% more than high school graduates, while those with an Associate degree earn 20% more! This simply points out that a person with a college degree can earn about 72% more, over a forty-year working life than a high school graduate. Given below are a few tips that can help you decide on the right degree and career path.

- Capitalize on your interests: That's right - if you don't want a boring old career, avoid following the herd. See what you're interested in; it could be writing, music or acting. Maybe you are the science geek in your class. The point is, follow your interests. You may be interested in the Arts; but when you see that it doesn't offers you a good chance to make a living, you quickly jump on to a degree related to science or some kind of research. This often results in sacrificing your interests for a field that could be boring. If you pursue a degree that interests you, the chances of you becoming bored or disillusioned decrease.
- Make your goals clear: Set your goals before you decide on a degree. That simply means that you need to know what you are getting yourself into. You've got to know how exactly a specific college degree can help you get closer to your dream career. If you are still not sure about your goals, it is high time that you get serious about it - because if your goals are not clear, you may end up getting a degree that will result in wasting both, your time as well as your money. It is always better to spend some time thinking and conducting a self-assessment to set your career path.
- Studying options: There are many online degree programs that you can choose from that are conducted by prestigious colleges and universities. In this way, you can get good work experience that is related to your career and a college degree at the same time. The world is extremely competitive and you have to rise to the occasion by making your goals clear and designing them specifically in conjunction with your career. A degree is an ideal way to achieve this objective and pave the way to a successful career.

About the Author

Tony Jacowski is a quality analyst for The MBA Journal. Aveta Solution's Six Sigma Online (<http://www.sixsigmaonline.org>) offers online six sigma training and certification classes for six sigma professionals such as, lean six sigma, black belts, green belts, and yellow belts.

Source: <http://americanahost.com>